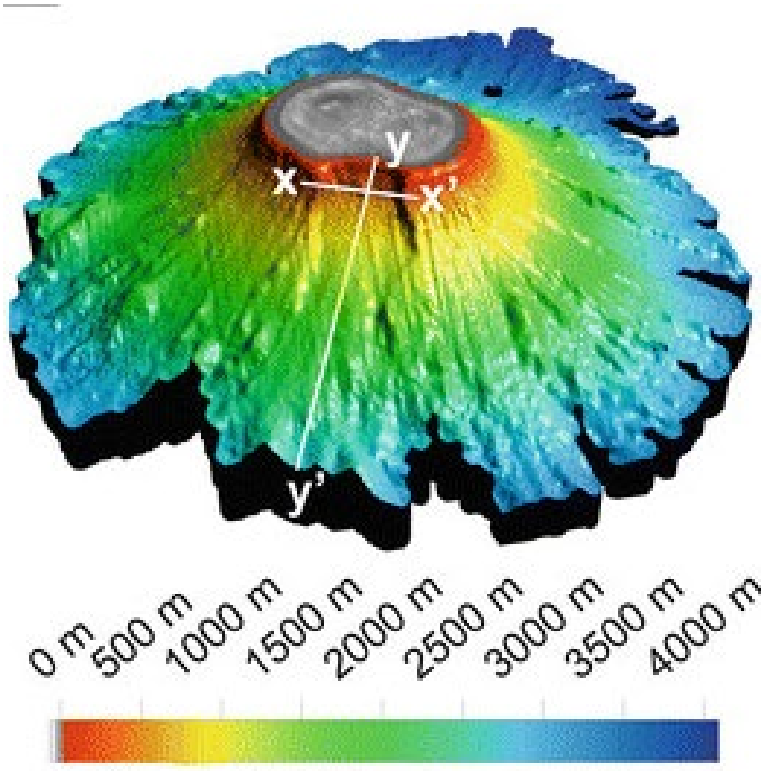
Introduction.

Nauru, according to geologists, is a raised atoll, formed from a coral reef that grew on top of a submerged volcanic seamount, which was later uplifted by tectonic forces.



Multibeam Bathymetry Picture: Krüger Jens C. and Pohler Susanne M.L. 2013

It is an island that almost straddles the equator, lying at 0°32' South - approximately 42 kilometers (about 26 miles) south of the equator.

The Nauruan language itself is recognized by linguists as being a divergent member of the Micronesian language family[1] – itself a division of the Oceanic Group within the extensive Austronesian language family. As far back as 1986, Frederick H. Jackson intimated that both Nauruan and Kosraean were the earliest settled outposts of the Micronesian peoples (see: On determining the external relationships of the Micronesian languages.) Researchers have not been able to pinpoint the stepping-stone of the Micronesian peoples other than they came from 'Near Oceania' (the Bismark Archipelago and the Solomon Islands, as well as perhaps the northern Vanuatu islands) between 1500 B.C. and 200 B.C. (Petersen 2009:39,40). The distinctiveness of the Nauruan language indicates a prolonged period of near total isolation from when it was first settled.

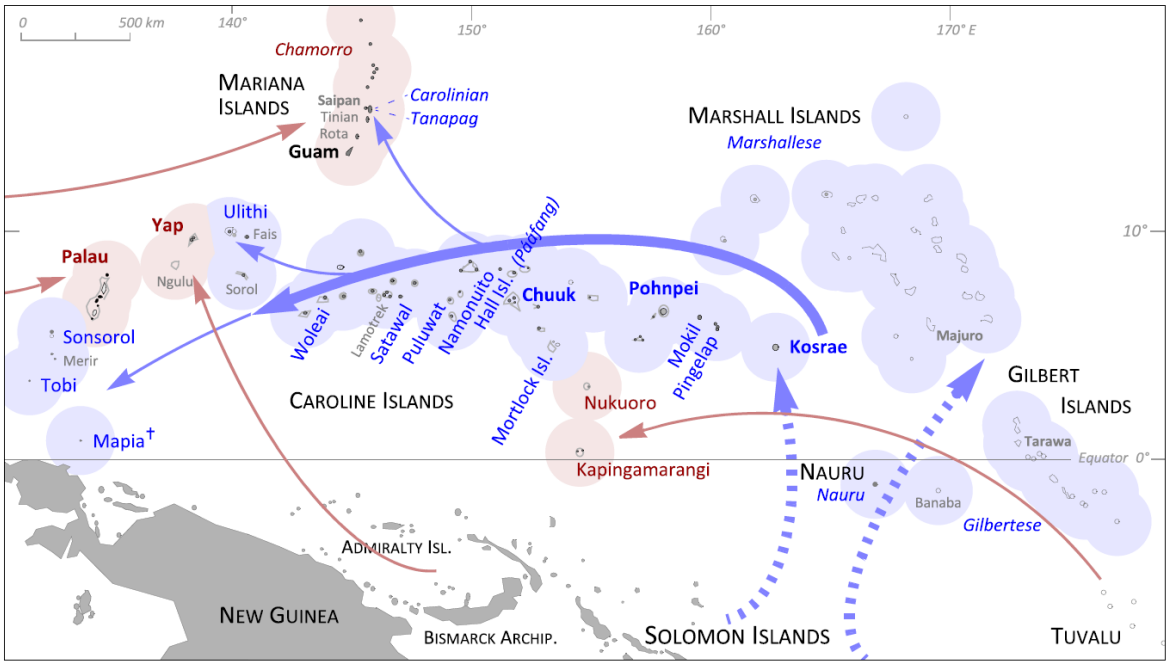
Shaded circles indicate a 100-mile radius around islands, the average distance of an overnight voyage (Marck, 1986)



The only occasional contact seems to have been drift canoes and their occupants from the Kiribati chain of islands as evidenced by the family trees recorded from Nauru, and even rarer visits from the Marshall Islands. Franz Hernsheim reported:

"There are a number of undeniable cases known that Marshallese islanders were washed up to Pleasant Island [an earlier name for Nauru] and the western Carolines, at distances of 1500 nautical miles."
[Die Marshall-Inseln in Mitteilungen der Geographischen Gesellschaft in Hamburg 1885-1886, p.303].

Nauru had contact with European/American individuals from the early 1800's. The newspaper 'Launceston Examiner', published in Launceston (Tasmania), in its issue of Saturday 2 September 1843, gave a report from a 'Captain Samson' of the vessel 'Giraffe', in which he stated that it was reported to him that seven Europeans resided on the island at that time. This European contact resulted in a loss of population through disease and strong spirits, and a period of armed conflicts with the introducion of firearms. This continued until the German Empire proclaimed a protectorate over the island on 3 October 1888, bringing in a period of stability and peace.

The first census taken by the German Imperial authorities enumerated 1,294 islanders. However, the population prior to European contact would have been significantly greater. Paul Hambruch in his work on Nauru in 1910 (Ergebnisse Der Südsee-Expedition 1908-1910: II. Ethnographie: B. Mikronesien, Band 1: Nauru, 1 Halbband. Hamburg: L. Friederichsen & Co., 1914, pages 59 – 62) obtained the names of some 169 hamlets (homesteads), 40 of which were uninhabited in 1910. So, the pre-contact population may have been nearer 2,500 during drought free periods and barring natural disasters like tsunamis or cyclones. [2]

Like all of the Pacific islanders, the population collapsed from the moment of European contact with the introduction of influenza varieties unknow to them, as well as Measles and Smallpox. Similar stories of population collapse have been recorded for the Iles Sous-le-Vent in the the Society Islands (100,000+ down to 8,000 in a fifty year period); the Marquesas Islands (circa 100,000 down to 12,000 in a fifty year period; Hawai'i (300,000+ down to 190,000 in a fifty year period) (see Sodter, F. 1993. L' Histoire Démographique. Atlas de la Polynésie Francaise. Institut français de recherche scientifique pour le développement en coopération; Robert C. Schmitt. 1971. New Estimates of the pre-censal population of Hawaii. The Journal of the Polynesian Society Vol.80, No. 2.); and a similar collapse for the First Nations of the Americas from the moment contact was made with Europeans. These collapses are mostly unrecorded (as with Nauru) as they pre-date sustained European contact.

With regard to diseases, Nauru suffered three serious outbreaks in the 20th Century. As reported by Camilla Hildegarde Wedgwood: in 1907 dysentery resullted in about 150 deaths; in 1910 a form of 'paralysis' carried off more than 50; and in 1920 Spanish Flu resulted in about 100 deaths.

Shortly after German annexation, missionaries of the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches began to be active on the island.

The German administration of Nauru ended at the beginning WW1, when on 9th September 1914 Nauru was occupied by Australian forces. After military control came to an end at the end of WW1, Nauru was then administered by Australia under a League of Nations mandate until the outbreak of WW2. In 1940 the Nauruan people numbered 1800 (Report to the Council of the League of Nations on the Administration of Nauru during the year 1940, page 25). Following the invasion and occupation of Nauru by the Imperial Japanese Forces on 26th August 1942, a horrendous situation befell the Nauruans. Mistreatment and food shortages were daily sufferings until liberation by the Australian armed forces on 13th September 1945 (Tanaka 2010). This was compounded by the forced removal of 1200 Nauruans to the Chuuk archipelago in 1943 where mistreatment and starvation resulted in a 38% fatality rate. It is estimated that up to 500 Nauruans died as a result of the Japanese occupation and forced removal. Australian administration was resumed in 1945 and the United Nations established a Trust Territory status for Nauru under Australian administration. Nauru achieved independence in 1968.

Nauru was the topic of ethnographic studies in the 1900's on four occasions. The first was the visit to Nauru by the German ethnologist Paul Hambruch in 1910; the second was a series of articles published by the long-term Roman Catholic missionary to Nauru Aloys Kayser between 1917 and 1936; the third was a visit to Nauru by the British anthropologist Camilla Hildegarde Wedgwood in 1935; and the fourth was a visit to Nauru by the French ethnologist Solange Petit-Skinner in 1975/1976. In addition to Kayser's articles, Hambruch, Wedgwood and Petit-Skinner published descriptions of their investigations.

This paper presents the various family trees that Paul Hambruch and Camilla Hildegarde Wedgwood collected in 1910 and 1935.

Background.

The last 140 or so years have seen a dramatic change in Nauruan society, a natural consequence of becoming part of the modern Western-oriented society.

At first European contact, Nauruan society was divided into 12 clans (usually referred to as tribes). Clan membership was inherited from the mother, and marriage was not permitted by a man and a woman of the same clan [matrilineal, exogamous clans].

A long term European resident stated in c.1902 that the Irutsi had 6 members, and the Iwi just 2 . [3] Hambruch and Wedgwood reported that the Irutsi and Iwi clans were no longer in existence. An anomaly appears in the 2002 and 2011 censuses, which enumerated persons who gave their clan membership as belonging to these two "extinct" clans.

The number and proportion of people without knowledge to which tribe they belonged stood increased from 6.3% to 9.3% of the population between 2002 and 2011, indicating a gradual breakdown in the clan system.

Orthographies.

The spelling conventions used by these two authors differ widely.

Both Paul Hambruch and Aloys Kayser appear to have used the phonetic alphabet (or a close relative) recommended by the German Catholic clergyman/linguist Wilhelm Schmidt, that appeared in his journal 'Anthropos' in 1907. [4]

An important distinction must be made, however, in that Aloys Kayser was a fluent Nauruan speaker, whereas Paul Hambruch was not, and he was not a linguist. This is very evident by the inconsistent usage of the many diachritic markers on both vowels and consonants by Hambruch and by the numerous mis-recordings of words made by Hambruch.

The attempt to write Nauruan in a phonetic alphabet results in many distinctions which do not have a phonemic relevance.

Camilla Hildegarde Wedgwood, like Hambruch, was neither a linguist nor competent in Nauruan. Her system of writing Nauruan uses a very simplified writing system which reflected to a certain degree what was later promulgated as the 'official' Nauruan orthography in 1938.[5] This 'official' orthography was never adopted, and to this day there is no standard orthography.

There are certain combinations of consonants recorded in the family trees which are impossible according to Nauruan phonology, such as the endings -kj and -p' which in most cases represent a final -j [the voiced palatal approximant, -y in current orthographies].

A notable convention is that the velar nasal is represented by ṅ in Hambruch, and ñ/ŋ in Wedgwood, which in currect orthographic systems in either represented by ng or ñ. Wedgwood represents the low mid-back vowel by a mixture of õ, ö and ø (if represented); while the mid-central vowel is represented by Wedgewood as ə; this is not a distinct, phonemic sound, but an allophonic variant of o, e, and a under certain circumstances. The high central unrounded vowel is represented by ũ (if represented).

It is also evident that some of the individuals' names are duplicated, either by a difference in orthography or by the fact that no definite link to the duplicated forms is given in the original material.

For a full discussion on Nauruan phonetics see Notes on the Synchronic Phonology of Nauruan and Notes on the Diachronic Phonology of Nauruan by Lev Blumenfeld (in Oceanic Linguistics, Volume 61, no. 2 pages 651-683 and pages 684-720) and The Synchronic and Diachronic Phonology of Nauruan: Towards a Defifinitive Classification of an Understudied Micronesian Language by Kevin Hughes (2020, The City University of New York).

Hambruch's Nauruan Family Trees 1910.

Hambruch presents a number of family trees gathered in his 1910 visit to the island (found in Nauru Halbband 1, Ergebnisse der Südsee-expedition 1908-1910, II.B) under the heading "Social organization". What follows is an English translation of this section. [6]

A number of the comments made by Hambruch came under criticism by Aloys Kayser and Camilla Hildegarde Wedgwood, so both Kayser's and Wedgwood's comments should be read in conjunction with Hambruch's work , and Kayser's and Wedgwood's comments are given after Hambruch's "Social Organization".

Social Organization

A state-like community in our sense does not exist in Nauru. Visitors are initially introduced to ones referred to as "king" or "chief"; these are reminders of bygone days. Upon closer inspection, one soon realizes that the titles "King" and "Chief" are merely additions from earlier white visitors to the island, who misunderstood or misinterpreted certain rights of individuals. The meaning and implications of these terms are foreign to the natives themselves. Those concerned probably perceive that the white man is initially somewhat more polite to the "king" and "chief". They respect their questionable, unknown position of power, and they themselves also derive some material benefits from these titles. But that's all; they treat their fellow countrymen quite differently.
For Nauru, it is no longer so easy to describe the social conditions in their original form. The disarmament of the island, the arrival of the missions, the economic upheavals of recent years have had a transformative impact, loosening the old forms and in some cases already destroying them. The following account is therefore based less on personal observation than on the statements of reliable natives who grew up under the ancien régime. Based on this, a picture of the state organization on the island can be drawn.

Nauru is a clan-based state where the individual clans and their families enjoy equal standing. No clan has an advantage, no clan has a preferential treatment over another; there is also no common leader. Each individual clan has its clan leader, some of whom simultaneously hold the position of leader in the respective district. This position arises in the clan that is inherently more powerful in the district due to its more numerous family branches and larger number of members. Nevertheless, one does not look down on a clan that is not blessed with as many members as one's own with envy or contempt. They, too, are held in high esteem and valued; one merely regrets that their power, as a consequence, cannot match one's own, which enjoys certain privileges due to its numerical strength.

Things were a little different in the past. Jung mentions that in 1894 the population of Nauru numbered 1431 souls. These were divided into 12 tribes, each headed by a chieftain.

"Among these tribes, the Doen Amed [= aroen Eamwit, Eamwit clan] not only held the highest position due to its larger number of members, but also because of the prestige enjoyed by the majority of its members. It was generally regarded as the original tribe from which all others, with the exception of the Irua tribe, originated, and its chieftains were accorded the first position."
[Friedrich Jung: Aufzeichnungen über die Rechtsanschauungen der Eingeborenen von Nauru (Notes on the legal notions of the natives of Nauru), in Mitteilungen aus den deutschen Schutzgebieten (Reports from the German Protectorates), Vol. X]

I cannot endorse the last statement. Each individual clan (and its family branches, in part) has its own unique history of origin and ancestry. Unfortunately, I was only able to record a few fragments of these, but these have nothing to do with the Eamuit clan. Likewise, the legends about the origin of the first humans in general, and especially the people of Nauru, indicate that Eamuit should not be considered the original tribe. The following list of clan names suggests Eāno as the likely name.

There are twelve clans in Nauru today. Their names are:

Teboi͡ - large, black fish. [modern spelling: Deiboe]
Eméa = good eyes.[modern spelling: Emea]
Eamuĭt - eel, moray eel (?). [modern spelling; Eamwit]
Eamuitemuĭt = small green grasshopper. [modern spelling: Eamwitmwit]
Rāniběk = drink water. [modern spelling: Ranibok]
Idrua - stranger. [modern spelling: Iruwa]
Emaṅum = the remnant of the torch. [modern spelling: Eamangum]
Eáno = the old one, the first. [modern spelling: Eano]
Emuíděra = the orphans (?) (without father). [modern spelling: Eamwidara]
Eoaru = plover (?).[modern spelling: Eoaru]
Irutsi = beach grass. [modern spelling: Irutsi; extinct]
Iŭi - head louse. [modern spelling: Iwi; extinct]

Teboi͡, Eméa, Eamuĭt, Rāniběk, and Idrua are the largest among them.

The clans, e̲aro̲e̲n, are further subdivided among themselves and fall into four rank-based, graded classes:

1)	temonib̲e̲	Large Landowners,	free
2)	ˈmǫ̌	“”	“”
3)	am̲ē̲neṅam̲e̲	Small Landowners	“”
4)	eṅame	“”	“”

Following this are two sub-classes of unfree people. Their members are members of the known clans, but serfs of the aforementioned rank classes.

5)	itsío	serfs, bondmen	unfree
6)	itíora	Prisoners of war “”	“”

The itsío are occasionally granted their own land, while the others never own any. Through marriage, men and women can lose their bondage and rise to higher social classes like free people.

[p.185]

Among the free people, the class belonging to the father determines their class; only among the daughters of the temonib̲e̲ class, who marry a man from a different class, do the children follow the class of the mother. In this case, the firstborn children retain their mother's class; the others enter the next lower class or remain in the fourth class if the mother belongs to that class. If the firstborn child is a girl, the next daughters retain their mother's class until a son is born; those born after the first male child are in a lower class. If a son follows the firstborn, if it is a boy, he immediately enters the lower class, while daughters usually belong to the same class. All children follow and belong to their mother's clan. Every clan has its head. It is the oldest male member of the temonib̲e̲ class of the main family of a clan, namely the family that traces its lineage directly back to the clan's ancestress. If the main line becomes extinct, its functions are taken over by the next oldest collateral line.

This also explains the preeminent position of an elder of the Eamuit clan, whom Jung recounts was the de facto chief in Nauru. The Eamuit tribe is the largest, most respected, and most widespread clan in Nauru. The 'eldest' [that is, the eldest Eamwit line] among the 5 chieftains in the five districts, where the Eamuit occupy a position of precedence, had, as clan chieftain of the Eamuit, a certain position of power ahead of them, which could then easily be regarded, in misapprehension of the actual circumstances, as that of a “chieftain” on the island.

Jung shares the following information:

“The powers of the chiefs, especially those of the [Doen Amed = Eamwit] tribe, were much more extensive before Nauru was incorporated into the protectorate than they are now, where their position is largely maintained only by the recognition they have received from the administration. Even if their power was greater before, it could never be considered absolute, and all chieftains were more or less subject to the rule of the [Amed = Eamwit]'s chieftain. He was the only one who could visit other districts during the wars without any risk to his life. He also had the power to temporarily establish peace or to reignite conflicts. Furthermore, he had the right to claim all land conquered by his tribe during the wars or to distribute it among other chiefs of his tribe. In comparison to the [Amed = Eamwit], the other tribal chiefs occupy only a subordinate position and their prestige is not such that they can exert any special influence over the natives.”
[Friedrich Jung: Aufzeichnungen über die Rechtsanschauungen der Eingeborenen von Nauru (Records of the legal beliefs of the natives of Nauru), in Mitteilungen aus den deutschen Schutzgebieten (Reports from the German Protectorates), Vol. X]

It seems that a woman once stood above all the chieftains.

There is nothing special to mention regarding the free people. The position of men and women will be discussed in more detail during the discussion of marriage.

[p.186]

However, the relationship between male and female serfs and their masters is interesting. These serfs comprised three groups: prisoners of war, voluntary serfs, and serfs serving as punishment. The serfdom of the first group is readily apparent; that of the second and third requires explanation. Voluntary serfs are formed by the homeless. If families were driven from their land during times of war, or had to flee their district for other reasons, they sought refuge and accommodation with the chieftain or a family of another district. They placed themselves in protective custody and pledged their lives and possessions to their protector, who in return had to provide for the livelihood of his protégés.

The serfs, imposed as punishment, were composed of those who had been bound by blood vengeance and redeemed themselves with their freedom and the surrender of their property. Thus, all those guilty of black magic, practicing it, or inciting it, and thereby causing the death of a person, were punished with the loss of their personal freedom and the confiscation of their property for the benefit of the aggrieved family. The sorcerers themselves were often killed.

The serfs were generally quite powerless. Their masters had absolute power over their lives. They could kill their serfs with impunity. A serf serves as a servant to his master and must obey his commands. Disobedience was formerly punished with corporal punishment. Serfdom is inherited from father to son and continues within the family. A servant may not marry a free woman without his master's permission. Through such a marriage, the woman enters into the same relationship as the man. As a rule, masters choose spouses from among their other subordinates. However, with his master's consent, a serf can regain his freedom through marriage with a free native woman, and this almost always occurs when the free woman is a respected figure or a large landowner. In total, there are about 18 to 20 families on Nauru who enjoy the right to keep serfs, and the number of those who are subject to each family varies from two to three families to twenty or more.”

Often, the serfs (especially the volunteers) were employed by their lords as farmers on their former estates. They then cultivated the land in the old way, lived undisturbed, and only had to deliver the produce to their lords. This loosened the bond of serfdom; this was because, on the one hand, the [p.187] yields were not always delivered, and on the other hand, after a number of years the serf administrators considered themselves the rightful owners of the land and felt themselves to be free again. A good portion of the land disputes still ongoing today can be attributed to this self-liberation of serfs and the supposedly derived legal claims to the land. The absolute right of lordship has ceased to exist. There are no longer any real serfs on Nauru; they exist only in name. [The term itsio, when used towards a freeman, is a gross insult and a grave disgrace.]

The individual clans originated on a totemistic basis. This totemism is only traceable; it is no longer consciously known to the natives themselves. However, the names of the individual clans, the family emblems, dietary restrictions, and the origin stories of individual clans have preserved the memory of it. It is important that each clan preserves its family trees. They are passed down orally. The old women are the living books; through them, the children are introduced to the family tree of the main line of the clan and their own family (including any collateral lines) at an early age, through months of instruction. Unfortunately, it was impossible for me to record the family trees of all the clans on the island completely. I had to make do with a few samples. However, these contain important and essential facts and give an idea of the organization of the clan, the families, and their structure.

The work begun and initiated in Nauru was welcomely expanded by the large family trees of the Emea, Eamuit, and Ranibek clans shown below.

These are the names of their clan members, written down by natives in Nauru after my departure, which I will share according to the original given to me by Eóbeden.

This story tells of the origin of the Ranibek, Eméa, and Iritsi clans. [According to a record by natives in Eodeben's book]

And the woman Emea arose and went away into the pool of Aniuangang, and she did not return, but went to Erau [footnote: a cave in Meage] and bore children.

The narrative thus appears to have no real conclusion. It is followed by the names of the ancestresses of the main lines from the Ranibek and Emea clans.

Unfortunately, the above story doesn't explain what these three beings are. In Nauru, various ideas about the origin of clans are prevalent among their individual members. What I was told was given to me bona fide. The informants are reliable men. The information itself is meager and only offers faint hints of what existed or still exists—because, unfortunately, I was unable to uncover the best sources, the old women. Furthermore, the following information was provided to me in response to the question: who their ancestors were.

Keneméi and A͡uuiyeda told me that their clans originated from the Eamuit clan.

“The Ranibek had the waterhole Aterebŏk as their home. Here lived an octopus, dagiga, and one day white terns, dagíagía, flew in, which he took as wives; and one of them gave birth to a creature that then became the matriarch of the clan. The Emea trace their origin to the union of a flower, ėamotenio, and the crab ebuijege . They are said to have had a daughter who later became the ancestress of the Emea.”

These details should be verified as soon as possible and possibly supplemented by information from other clans. Besides these traces of tribal totemism, there may also be evidence of individual totemism. Certain indications of this are found in the legends and folktales of the Nauru people.

Within one clan, that of the Tebo͡i the gender relations could be examined more closely. The information I owe to the old Abubu provides sufficient insight into the class distribution within the main family, the inheritance of the clan chief's dignity, and the kinship between the Tebo͡i, Emea, and Eamuit.

The symbols ♂ and ♀ represent the clan members; family members who marry into the clan or are related are represented by the symbols ♂ and ♀ [in the original text, the body of the symbols are filled in with black] . The individual generations are designated with α, β, γ, δ , the children in the generations according to their birth order with I, II, III, etc., the currently living clan head with □₁, their successors or their representatives during the minorhood of the successors with □₂, □₃, etc. The family of the clan head and their successors are framed.

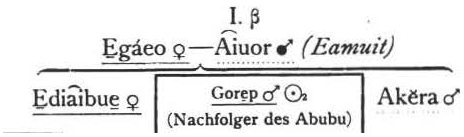
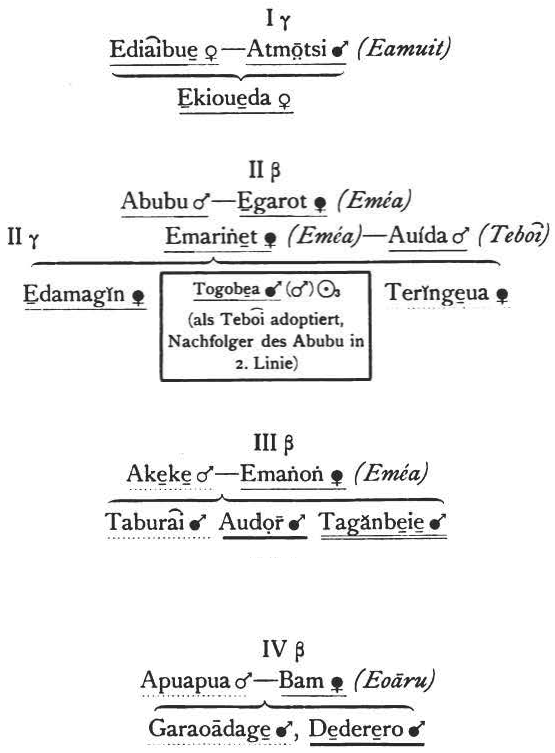
The marriages of these children.



[Nachfolger des Abubu = successor of Abubu]

[p.192]



The family tree lists the ancestors in each generation of the main line. From the great-grandmother [Erōmuromiyauī] ♀ down to the youngest future ancestress, little Ekioueda ♀ , there are 18 generations. Assuming an average interval of 15 years between two generations, the Teboî lineage would be approximately 270 years old. However, the names of the matriarchs reveal nothing about the kinship between the individuals; it is not clear whether the list truly lists the first daughter following the mother, or whether, in the case of an ancestress without daughters, her next younger sister and her successor are mentioned. (Compare the genealogy of the Emea, p. 190.)

The nature of this genealogical tradition is remarkable, significant, and interesting. Although the male clan leaders possess considerable power during their lifetime, which pales in comparison to that of the female ancestors, their names are considered so important that they are preserved for their descendants, while the names of the female clan leaders are largely forgotten. (Compare the genealogical tables of the Eméa.)

The matriarch of the 15th generation, Ebanametaṅ ♀, married the Eamuit man Dogura ♂, the eldest son of a matriarch of this family. Dogura, to whom the clan chiefdom of the Eamuit should have passed, left the Eamuit clan through his marriage to a matriarch of the Teboi and ceded the dignity to his next younger brother.

[p.193]

Both spouses belonged to the temonibe class and had four children: two daughters and two sons. Their firstborn, Egaeo ♀, and her second-born brother, Abubu ♂, belong to the same class, the temonibe. Their siblings, Ekeke ♀ and Apuapua ♂ , enter the next lower class, the ʻmo.

All four married and have adult children, some of whom have already remarried and have offspring. Teboi and Eamuit preferentially marry among themselves.

The marriages of the first two children, Egaeo ♀ and Abubu ♂, are of particular interest, as they clearly provide information about the lineage and the inheritance of the proper dignity of the clan chief.

Lineage.

The temonibe Egaeo ♀ married the ʻmo-man Aiuoɾ̄ ♂ from the Eamuit clan. They had three children together. First, a girl was born, Ediaibue ♀; she belongs to the class of temonibe and is listed as a direct descendant of the main line in the Teboi family tree as the matriarch. She marries the temonibe-man Atmotsi ♂ from the Eamuit clan, and they have a young daughter, Ekioueda ♀, who is listed as a temonibe and as the future matriarch in the family tree of the main Teboi family. The other children of Egaeo ♀ are the temonibe-man Gorep ♂ and his younger brother Akera ♂, who belongs to the ʻmo class. We will return to Gorep ♂ shortly.

The inheritance of the dignity of a clan chief.

The early clan chief of the Teboi the temonibe Abubu ♂, married the temonibe woman Egarot ♀ from the Emea clan. They have a daughter, Emariṅet ♀, who also belongs to the temonibe class and, according to the law of matrilineal succession, to the clan of the Emea. This daughter is married to the temonibe man Auida ♂ from a branch family of the Teboi clan. They have three children. The first two, a girl and a boy, belong to the ʿmo class, the youngest to the ameneṅame class. All three originally followed their mother and are members of the Emea clan.

The succession to the clan chiefdom of the Teboi now presents an interesting phenomenon: the conversion of an Emea member into a member of the Teboi to secure the succession.

This happens as follows.

The clan leader Abubu ♂ has only one next heir entitled to inherit, the eldest son of his sister Egaeo ♀, the temonibe Gorep ♂.

Gorep ♂ is young and unmarried; his sister also has no sons who could inherit the honor of clan chief in the second line, but only a daughter. If she later has a son, he is the rightful successor of Gorep ♂. Therefore, the determination of a successor for Gorep ♂ is necessary for the time being. A temonibe is required for this; and as such, the Emea man Togobea ♂ is the closest candidate to the main line. Togobea ♂ is therefore included in this clan as Teboi and is considered the successor of Gorep ♂. If a son is born to the Ediaibue, then Togobea ♂ becomes the guardian of this son, who is likely to be a minor, upon the death of the Gorep ♂.

[p.194]

The marriages of the two other sons of Ebanametaṅ ♀ , Ekeke ♂ and Apuapua ♂, are of interest because of the class classification of their children. Both married temonibe women as ʿmo-men. Ekeke ♂ has three sons who successively enter different classes. The first son, like his father, belongs to the ʿmo class; his younger brother is one class lower in the ameneṅame class; the youngest belongs to the last class of free landowners, the eṅame.

The situation is similar with Apuapua ♂. His eldest son is a member of the ʿmo class, the second belongs to the ameneṅame.

For the main lines of the Ranibek and Eméa, the lineage and inheritance of the clan chiefship is as follows [unfortunately, the class assignments were not recorded].

An overview of the generational series of the main lines just named is provided by the scheme shown on the table (see p. 198).

The number of male and female clan members, as well as the number of adopted members from outside the clan, has been noted separately for each generation. (Table, p. 198).

This list of names, which I recorded on Nauru, encouraged the natives to write down the names of their ancestors, which had been passed down orally. Although it was done in a rather cumbersome way, it is now possible to trace the development of a tribe, the Emea, over a period of approximately 200 years; interesting details, which one would hardly or never obtain through lengthy questioning, emerge naturally.

In writing, the natives proceeded in the manner illustrated by the sample from the beginning of the Emea name table.

And so on

The genders listed in the table were subsequently provided to me as evidence when I reviewed these names. Where a question mark is indicated, the name of the father or mother (husband or wife) is no longer known, or the women were born out of wedlock.

When examining the Emea family tree, it will be noticeable that most lines only show a generational sequence of 1 or 2 generations, while one collateral line records 14 generations. This is peculiar; but can probably be explained by the fact that marriages were contracted very early in this line.

The overview is further interesting because of the information it provides about the fertility of marriages. Monogamy is predominant; polygamy is rare; polyandry is recorded only once.

Unfortunately, I was unable to determine with absolute certainty the number of living members in the last few generations. In the main line, all members of the nine generations have passed away. The members of the tenth generation have an average age of approximately 50 years. In the 14-generation collateral lines, the members of the eleventh generation, who are also around fifty years old, are recorded.

The lines of the Idrua clan.

The Idrua clan's very name indicates that they are not native to Nauru. (Idrua = stranger, foreigner). All immigrants to Nauru who were not accepted into one of the existing clans (cf. Emea p. 207) form a special clan. They all consider themselves to be part of a group, regardless of their affiliation with the clans of their homeland. Thus, the Idrua clan actually consists of quite diverse elements. Since the wives and daughters of the mostly involuntary strangers who were stranded on Nauru were highly sought after as wives—the men were mostly beaten to death—the Idrua clan was able to grow into one of the strongest on the island. From eight lines, I received the following information about their origin and matriarch.

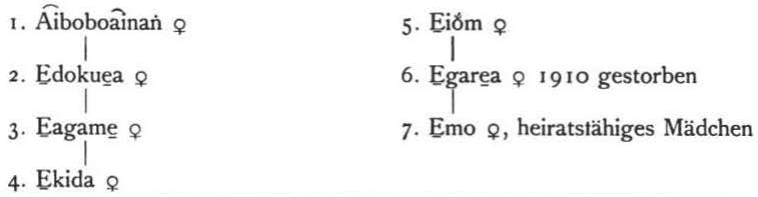
A family comes from Marakāe = Merkin in ep ĭnʿrua (Land of Strangers). [Nauru name for Ni makin, i.e. Makin atoll, and Ni piru, i.e. Beru atoll, in the Gilbert Islands (=Kiribati). There is also an atoll in Kiribati named Marakai.]

They tell this story about their origins:
One day, several people from Marakāe traveled to Maiĭěn [Maiana atoll ?] for a festival. Among those in the canoe were the woman Edogúa and her daughter Eboboi anaṅ. On the way, the canoe drifted away. It reached Nauru, where the canoe's occupants were welcomed. [That has not always been the case. Just a few years ago, castaways were beaten to death by Nauruans.]

After some time, they returned to their homeland. After some time, they returned to their homeland. But not all of them. The girl Eboboi anaṅ stayed behind. Against her will, because the Nauruan man Aiyobu, who is still praised in song today as one of the island's most skilled divers because he could dive 35 fathoms deep, abducted the girl and took her as his wife. They lived in a cave in Aiyuba.

This girl is the ancestress of an Idrua lineage, which so far lists the following generations:



[gestorben = deceased]
[heiratsähiges Mädchen = girl of marriageable age]

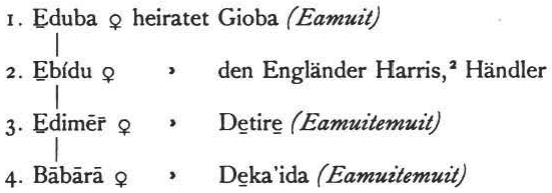
2.

The woman Ẹdeoa from the southern Gilbert island of Onodōr [Onotoa atoll, Kiribati] married Dabuanap of Tăbiteuea [Tabiteuea atoll, Kiribati]. They had a daughter, Ẹduba, and wandered together to Nauru. Here, Ẹduba married the man Giōba from the Eamuit clan and thus became the matriarch of the following Idrua line:



1. Ẹduba ♀ heiratet Gioba (Eamuit)
2. Ẹbídu ♀ › den Engländer Harris,[2] Händler
3. Ẹdimēr ♀ › Dẹtirẹ (Eamuitemuit)
4. Bābārā ♀ › Dẹka'ida (Eamuitemuit)

From his last marriage came a Black-looking, curly-haired, dark-skinned, intelligent individual Koābin ♂ (p. 196), known as David. His mother Barbara is the child of Ẹdimer and a Black man from the whaling ships. Koābin has four children, in whom the Black type is also clearly preserved.

3.

The Gilbert [I-Kiribati] man Gadaraua came to Nauru from Apamama [Abemama atoll, Kiribati] with his wife Eríga. They had a daughter Egairo, who married the Nauruan man Debaudar from the Emea clan.

1. Egairo ♀ heiratet Debaûdar ♂ (Eméa)
2. Edoṅa ♀

4.

The woman Edaraua migrated from Makin with her husband and daughter Edaberanimadaṅ. The girl married a Nauruan man from the Eamuit clan.

1. Edaberanimadaṅ ♀ heiratet Akuida ♂ (Eamuit)
2. Doriuogi ♀ › Amenoāk (Eamuit)
3. Ebadidi ♀ › Dekaraûa (Teboi)
4. Daûbuk ♀

7.

The Gilbertese couple Dḛmaibīn ♀ and Dau͡adu wandered from Makin with their daughter Ḛdau͡’uogo, who later married the Nauruan man Dau͡bok.

1. Ḛdaû'uogo ♀ heiratet Dâûbok ♂

Critique of Hambruch by Aloys Kayser

Aloys Kayser wrote a paper criticising Paul Hambruch's two volume exposition on Nauru. Here follows a translation of that part of his critique that touches on the clan system and family trees – taken from Die Eingebornen von Nauru (Südsee). Eine kritische Studie [The Nauruan Native (South Seas): A critical study], Anthropos Vol. 12/13, 1917/1918.

[p.327]

Hambruch divides the population into "four rank-based classes," I, 184: 1. Temónibe̲, 2.ˑ mŏ̤, 3. amē̲neṅame̲, 4. eṅame̲, and into "two sub-classes of unfree people": itsío and itíora. I cannot agree with this classification of the population. During my eleven years on Nauru, I only encountered three rank classes: the demónibo̤ (family elders), also called e̤o̲mó̲, the emó̤no̤ṅamo̤(the free people) and the ifiö (the serfs). The two names demónibo̤ and e̤o̲mó̲ mean one and the same thing and may be used interchangeably.

demónibo̤ is a loan word (de-, te- is the Gilbertese article) while e̤o̲mó̲ is the proper native Nauruan word. Both words mean 'the best, the most senior, the family head'. The dignity of such a person is also denoted by e̤o̲mó̲. The last expression is by far the most common on the island; one never says that eko̤owen mo̲nibö̤n, but eko̤owen o̲mó̲n, 'his dignity is gone' (o̲mó̲ o̲mó̲m o̲mó̲n = my, thy [your, singular], his dignity of being an elder). If a chief marries below his rank e.g. an ifiö), then one says o púduen o̲mó̲n, magó̤n o̲mó̲n, e totuen o̲mó̲n, 'his rank as elder has fallen (lost), ended, been reduced'. The term eṅamo̤ does not denote a social class as such, but rather generally means a living being (the chick in the incubated egg is an eṅamo̤, a piglet is also an eṅamo̤. Regarding ifiö and ifiöṙa̲, no distinction in rank can be established either. ifiö is the lower, propertyless class (not slave, as is often mistakenly translated), while ifiöṙa̲ is a very nasty insult and roughly means: Poor fool, parasite, etc.; the expression is always contemptuous. ṙa̲ means to beg, to parasitize, to stare hungrily, and is especially said of a hungry dog who sits during his master's meal, greedily eyeing every bite his master brings to his mouth, expecting that something will fall its way; ṙa̲ is also used by old people when, rejected by their relatives, they loiter and beg among strangers. The intensified form is ra̲ra̲, meaning to constantly parasitize. This expression, combined with ifiö, then yields ifiöra̲, ifiöra̲ra̲; for the elders it becomes éṅab e ṙa̲ṙa̲, éṅab e ṙa̲ (literally: grown man, he begs), i.e. an old parasite. ifiö can be called anyone who truly is one, ifiöra̲, on the other hand, always gives rise to disputes, formerly even to wars. The three estates are distributed evenly among all districts and clans…

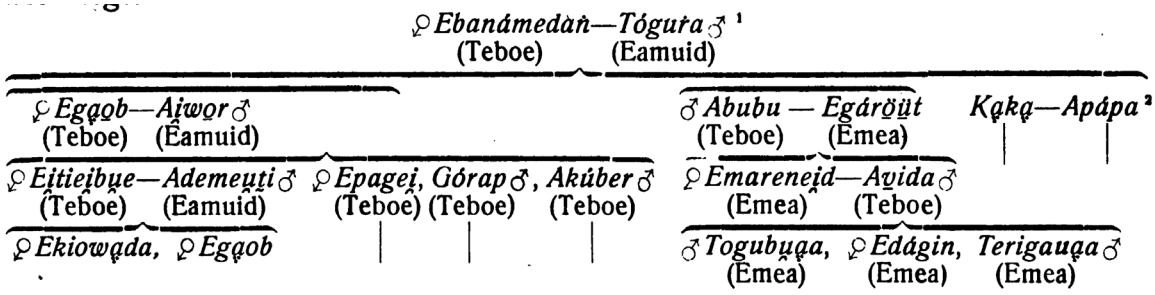
Class-determining (1, 185) is not only the position of the father, but also of the mother, and in the same way. If a person marries below their station, e.g., a demónibą man marries an emą́nąṅamą woman, then the children are demónibą ex parte patris and emą́nąṅamą ex parte matris (and vice versa), and the children, in order to characterize their position, refer to their parents: öüga bue demónibą ṅéa etönö, demónibą ṅéa innö, thus, 'because my father is demónibą, my mother is demónibą'. If both parts are demónibą, then all children also bear the title demónibą. The firstborn holds a position of precedence; however, subsequent younger siblings are also considered demónibą. demónibą, who head an entire clan or district, are unknown. Therefore, if the author consistently refers to clan chiefs and house chiefs, he is granting the demónibą excessive powers. According to native law, the demónibą only has authority within his own family, where "family" is understood in a broader sense. Thus, one often hears the phrase: ei̯ ta demónibą ubu̯íen, that is 'he is only a demónibą in his homestead (kinship)'. After what has been said, one no longer notices that so many people - men and women, their sons and daughters, even little children themselves - call themselves and allow themselves to be called demónibą, [p.329] the firstborn as well as all subsequent siblings.

The demónibą dignity is only passed on within the family (and has nothing to do with the clan), and always in the linea recta ascendens; if this line dies out, then the firstborn (male or female, it remains the same) of the next collateral line comes into consideration. According to Hambruch, only male persons would be candidates for the demónibą dignity; and if one such person were to fail, there would be no other solution than to seek a replacement in another, foreign clan by "transforming a member of one clan into another." The example Hambruch uses to illustrate his claim is unfortunately very poorly chosen, as it demonstrates precisely the opposite of what he intended to explain. I am fortunately very familiar with the family of Abubu (1, 191). According to him, the circumstances are as follows:



The marriage of Ebanámedaṅ with Tóguṙa was of equal standing; consequently, all legitimate children from this marriage are demónibą, namely Egą̣ob and Abubu. Egą̣ob was the firstborn and exercised the demónibą right of primogeniture until her death, while Abubu is an ordinary mortal.

Upon the death of Egaob, her eldest daughter, Eitieibue, took her place as family elder and holds this position to this day. If Eitieibue dies, then the Ekiowada becomes the family elder. A male firstborn was lacking, so only women took their turn. If the young Ekiowada had a son as her firstborn, the dignity would pass to him upon her death. According to Hambruch, Abubu should always have been the family elder, since he was the oldest male member of this demónibą family. Everything said about Gorap and Aoida (1, 193) is therefore also invalid.

The line of descent is inherited only through the eldest daughter of the main branch of the clan; if there is no daughter in the main branch, then the line continues through the eldest daughter of the next closest family. A common clan head is unknown; unless the female heir is considered as such, in which case a male person is always excluded. Therefore, all genealogies always list only female names (the initial letter 'e' is characteristic for female names).

[1] Das Zeichen ♀ bedeutet weiblich, ♂ männlich.

[The symbols X means female, and X[1] means male]

[2] Kąką und Apápa kommen hier für die demónibą-Würde nicht in Betracht, da sie unehelich sind. — Die Apápa (nicht Apuapua) ist die Schwester des Abubu, die Épageį die Schwester der Eitieibue, also die Nichte des Abubu. — S. I, 191 ist Apuapua eine Frau (♀), auf Seite 192 ist sie zum Manne geworden (♂). Auch ist Bam (I, 192) keine Frau (♀), sondern der Mann der Apápa.

[Kąką and Apápa are not eligible for the demónibą dignity here, as they are illegitimate. - Apápa (not Apuapua) is the sister of Abubu, Épageį the sister of Eitieibue, thus the niece of Abubu. - On page I, 191, Apuapua is a woman, on page 192 she has become a man. Also, Bam (I, 192) is not a woman, but the husband of Apápa.]

[p.330]

Each clan has its own totem, after which it is named. (The irúa = foreign clan, had different totems, corresponding to the various family groups of their homeland from which they separated. The totem is not so important to them in terms of whether they can marry each other, which would be considered incest in the Nauruan clans.) According to legend, all the clans emerged simultaneously from a cave in Juw (in eastern Nauru); others, including the Eel People, derive all totems from their own (eámuid = Eel); still others divide the totems into main groups with branched subgroups. This question presents difficulties that can hardly be resolved. The most numerous are the irúa (the foreigners, the newcomers), followed by eámuid, and téboę. The family trees recorded by Hambruch should be treated with extreme caution. Even if the three informants were "reliable men," as men they are never truly competent in these matters. Only women are the guardians of these genealogies. I cannot verify the accuracy of the family trees from here, but for some genealogies I obtained different results than Hambruch.

[Here ends Kayser's section]

Wedgwood's Nauruan Family Trees 1935.

Camilla Hildegarde Wedgwood visited Nauru in 1935 and her ethnographic results were published in the journal 'Oceania' in 1936 in two separate articles.

The following comments are reproduced from her article "Report on Research Work in Nauru Island, Central Pacific Part I [Oceania Vol. VI No.4, 1936].

[p.372]

The Kinship Organization.

The Nauruans were divided into twelve matrilineal, exogamous clans. Of these two, Irutsi and Iwi, have been extinct for some twenty years. The names of the remaining ten are : Eamwit, Eamwidumwit, Deboe, Eoaru, Emea, Eano, Emañum, Ranibõk, Eamwidara and Iruwa. Of these the most important, because the largest, is Eamwit, with a membership of 392, and next in size are Iruwa with 328 and Eamwidumwit with 274. Historical legends show that Eamwit was for many generations the most powerful and influential clan in the island, though for perhaps a couple of generations, after the leading man of Eamwit had suffered a humiliating defeat in battle, Deboe rose to the position of greatest force and authority. To-day, Deboe has only 167 members.

In Hambruch's opinion, the clans of Nauru were originally totemic, though, as he rather naively adds, the people do not recognize this fact and only traces of it are apparent. [Hambruch, op. tit. I, p. 187. " Die einzelnen Sippen sind auf totemistischer Grundlage entstanden. Dieser Totemismus ist nur in Spuren nachweisbar ; er ist den Eingeborenen selbst nicht mehr bewusst." (The individual clans originated on a totemistic basis. This totemism is only detectable in traces; it is no longer consciously recognized by the natives themselves.)

It is certainly true that the names of the clans are such as one would expect to find associated with toternism : thus Deboe is a variety of large, black fish ; Eamwit is an eel ; Eamwidumwit is a small green grasshopper or locust; Eoaru is a plover and Iwi means "hair-louse." Furthermore, some of the clan origin-myths have a distinctly totemic flavour, as for example, [p.373] that which tells of the two deboe fish which were stranded at low tide on the reef and out of which came two worms, which then gave place to two women, one of whom became the ancestress of the Deboe clan. Whether such names and such origin myths prove a totemic "origin " for the Nauruan clans is however a matter of only theoretical interest.

To-day there is nothing to suggest that even in pre-European times the members of a clan had any ritual attitude towards the creature whose name the clan bore. It is true that I was told by one informant that the people of the Eamwit should not eat eels, but another elderly informant who was himself an Eamwit man, denied this. So much of the old ritual life of the people has gone during the past fifty years that it is very possible that typical totemic rites and tabus did once exist ; but their complete disappearance even from the memory of elderly men and women, strongly suggests that, even if they did exist at the beginning of last century, they were probably of little sociological importance.

Hambruch also suggests that originally the clans were probably local groups. There is I think little evidence for this, although several of them are associated in their origin myths with particular places on the island. Thus, there is a spot on the beach of Nibok where, according to tradition, the ancestresses of Ranibok, Emea and Irutsi first came to land ; on the beach of Aiwo is another place where the two first women of the Deboe clan first appeared, and inland in Boe is the cave where one of them dwelt. But these places are not regarded as the property of the clans with which they are associated, nor of individual members of these clans.

There is no evidence even that they were ever venerated as places of ritual importance to the· clansmen.

[Hambruch, op. cit. I, pp. 58-62. " Nauru zahlt zeit altersher vierzehn Gaue, von denen jeder urspriinglich im Besitz einer Sippe war. Das hat sich heute geandert." (Nauru has historically had fourteen districts, each originally owned by a clan. This has changed today.)

At the time of his visit he reported that the clans and districts were associated as follows :

To Eamwit belong the districts Ijuw, Baitsi, Denigomodu, Buada, Menen.
To Emea belong the dist1icts Boe, Nibok.
To Deboe belong the districts Yarren, Anabar, Anetan.
To Ranibok belongs the district Aiwo.
To Eamwidara belongs the district Ewa.
To Irua belong the districts Anibari, Waboe.

In saying, however, that these districts belonged to these clans Hambruch is certainly wrong ; actually these were no more than the clans to which the " district chiefs " of that time belonged, and by no means all of them were of true temonibe rank, though many of them were.

In Nauru, as in so many parts of the Pacific, considerable stress is laid upon primogeniture, and the most important man in the clan is the eldest son of the woman who traces her descent back, through a line of eldest daughters, to its original foundress. Such a woman and her children are spoken of as being temónibe. People who belong to junior branches of the clan are amenеŋame. Often it is very difficult to determine clearly whether an individual is temónibe or amenеŋame for there is no hard and fast distinction between the two, and men or women whose position is on the borderline may be regarded as either, their personal character and popularity often helping to determine which. What power or influence the leading man or woman of the clan had we cannot now really tell. During the nineteenth century one who had a dominant personality and, if a man, was a noted warrior, could wield considerable authority, not only within his own clan, and also within his own locality, but even throughout the greater part of the island. Before this time, however, and especially before influences fro_m the Gilbert Islands had introduced the God of War and the Gilbertese methods of fighting, it is probable that the head of the clan though respected on account of his or her birth, had little political importance, and it is interesting to notice in this context, that the word temónibe by which they are designated is itself of Gilbertese origin.

In the nineteenth century when warfare became increasingly important, certain men belonging to junior branches of a clan came to be regarded as temónibe on account of their valour and skill in fighting, and sometimes seem to have eclipsed in importance the true clan leader. Thus to-day, Meta is the senior woman of Eamwit, but a hundred years ago it was not her ancestress in the direct line nor the brother of this ancestress who counted most politically but rather certain members of a junior branch : Dagaidabara and his sisters' sons Agoijaruk and Ijibauwo, whose qualities as champions in war raised them to the status of temónibe and clan leaders. Probably however they were never considered to be on an equal footing with the true temónibe by birth.

It is significant that of the district chiefs who have held office since the coming of the white man's government many have not been of true temónibe rank. and I was told that when selecting a new district chief relatively little attention is paid to the rank of a man but rather to his suitability for the work which this office entails. The position is regarded as a European innovation for which there was really no parallel in old Nauruan society, and the district chief is never spoken of as temónibe but always by the English word "Chief," the status and function of each being regarded as absolutely distinct and dissimilar.

The Kinship System.

The kinship system of Nauru is a variety of the so-called "Hawaiian" system. In Nauru, however, people do not address each other by kinship terms, but by their personal names, and it is not easy therefore to know what is the range of the terms. Generally speaking, it seems that they are only used for those with whom the speaker can trace a genealogical connection. It is possible that in pre-European days the range may have been wider, for to-day the rights and duties of kin towards one another are less important than they almost certainly were of old. It is probable, however, that the most important kinship group was always the amenubwien, or group of people related to an individual on both sides of the family, with whom a genealogical relationship can be traced. The word is used in very much the same vague way as we use the word "relative," and just as we distinguish, again rather vaguely, between close and distant relatives, so too the Nauruans distinguish between amenubwien kər and amenubwien ogoijok, and as regards the latter the kinship bonds and obligations are slight. Even those who are related by marriage are spoken of as amenubwien, but I am inclined to believe that primarily it is a word used for true relatives and not for affinals. It is probable therefore that the range of the kinship terms is the amenubwien, and that what relatives are included in this category is determined by circumstances rather than by rule.

[Oceania Vol. VII No.1, Part II]

Rank.

It has already been said that Nauruans lay great emphasis upon primogeniture and distinguish those who are temónibe (the senior members of the senior branch of a clan) from those who ameneŋame. Actually there seem to have been three social classes in Nauru: the temónibe, the ameneŋame, and the itsio. The distinction between the two first is determined by the accident of birth; the itsio or serf class, however, was composed of men and women who had been taken prisoner in war or who, having escaped from the enemy, had put themselves under the protection of a temónibe or of some powerful man living in a district other than their own. Such people were often landless and, unless they married someone of higher status, their offspring seem usually to have held the same lowly and dependent position. They might acquire land and trees, for these were often given in return for services, but the stigma of being itsio was still theirs. According to one informant a temónibe or a war-leader had the right of life and death over his itsio, and would resent it if they were injured by another. It is said too that itsio could be given away or inherited like other goods, but I do not know of any instances of this, and I am inclined to believe [p.2] that their position was not in fact as unenviable as it may have been in theory. To-day, under the administration of the white man, the serf-like condition of itsio is no longer known, but the descendants of these people are still very generally looked down upon.

Quite distinct from the position of such prisoners or refugees of war, and of impoverished folk who had put themselves under the charge of a temónibe, was that of the castaways, who from time to time reached Nauru from the Gilbert Islands. Sometimes such people were killed before they came ashore, but if they reached land safely they were usually taken under the protection of the temónibe or other important man of that part of the island in which they found themselves. From their protector they often received land and were indeed frequently adopted into his family. They were sometimes spoken of as rawen or pets and were treated as such, but never as lowly dependants such as itsio. A man of importance liked to have such people attached to him. The Gilbertese were good warriors, and, more important, the cult of the war god Taburig was theirs, and it was by the correct worship of Taburig that victory in battle could be assured. Furthermore it was the Gilbertese who had knowledge of sorcery-a subject of which the Nauruans were ignorant-and through their help in performing death or sickness magic therefore, a man could gain power and influence over his fellows. So highly were their knowledge and help valued, that not infrequently a Gilbertese castaway was given a woman of noble birth to wife, and it was common for a temónibe to take a castaway girl into his home and rear her as a bride for his son.

Among the middle class, the ameneŋame, some Nauruans distinguish between those who are nearly related to the temónibe, or who are senior members of important branches of a clan, and those who are but juniors and belong only to unimportant branches. The former they term ameneŋame ; the latter only eŋame. The ameneŋame are generally owners of a considerable amount of land, and have much influence, and I was told that in olden days they had the right to join any gathering of temónibe and take part in their [p.3] discussions. The eŋame on the other hand usually own only a small amount of land and are considered to be entirely unimportant.

Kayser in his critique of Hambruch's work denies that there is any distinction between eŋame and ameneŋame, maintaining that the latter word means only " the eŋame people," and I was therefore very doubtful at first as to whether I had understood my informants aright, but since the distinction was made spontaneously by several different men and women I have come to the conclusion that it must be genuine. Hambruch also records the existence of two other classes: mo, which he places as second in importance to the temónibe, and itsiora, which he places lowest in the scale, beneath itsio. As Kayser points out the word mo (or more correctly eomo) means "good," and is in this context synonymous with temónibe, as indicating the best or most senior member of the clan or lineage. As regards the itsiora, Kayser states that this is no more than a word of abuse, used alike for men and dogs who cadge food from others. I myself only heard it used once in a sense that might suggest that it had a class significance. My informant was telling me of a man of low rank who had married a temónibe woman, and said of him that he was ugly, lazy and itsiora. Hoping to find out in what sense this word was being used I asked whether he was itsio, and was told "no, itsiora." I am not satisfied, however, that this was used to denote a social rank lower than itsio ; it seemed rather an expression of the deepest contempt for which itsio was not strong enough, for to-day I believe that this latter word is often employed in a general derogatory sense and not only as a definition of social status. The woman whose husband was under discussion had previously broken off her engagement to a near kinsman of my informant, and had very much degraded herself in the eyes of the community by marrying a man so far beneath her socially; it was therefore to be expected that my informant would use the most degrading term he could by which to describe this man.

One man, speaking to me of rank in Nauru named the temónibe, ameneŋame and itsio, but then substituted for the last the word eŋame, indicating that itsio was a somewhat too opprobrious term to use for the lowest rank at the present day.

As regards marriage between members of the different social classes and the status of their children my evidence is by no means clear. It seems that although it was correct for a temónibe girlespecially an eldest daughter, to marry a temónibe man (in which event their offspring would inevitably be temónibe) , sometimes she did marry beneath her. Indeed the union of a temónibe woman and an ameneŋame man of wealth and importance was not uncommon and their children were I believe usually regarded as temónibe. Rarely did a woman of the upper rank wed a poor and uninfluential man, and still more rarely a man of the itsio class, though such marriages are not unknown. I gathered that the status of the children was then often disputed. In the instance which I have mentioned above the temónibe woman claims temónibe rank for her children, but most of the people with whom I spoke on the matter were unwilling to accord this, so contemptible did they consider the father. One man said, however, that their position in society when they were grown up would depend to some extent upon their own personalities.

It was probably always more common for a man to marry beneath him than for a woman to do so, but even in such unions the position of the children is not clearly defined and depends to a great extent upon the characters of their parents and of themselves. It seems that in Nauru there were no special insignia of rank, no special privileges or obligations by which members of the different social classes were distinguished from each other, and that apart from the importance of primogeniture and seniority, wealth and personality did more to determine social status than parentage.

Hambruch (op. cit. pp. 185, 191-3) gives a clear account of rules regulating the social status of children, but I myself could not find that any such rules existed. I believe that in his desire to have everything clear cut, Hambruch elaborated them from the (insufficient) data in his possession and did not realize how flexible the whole system of rank is in Nauru. Certainly he is wrong in his general statement that, apart from marriage with a temónibe woman, among " freemen " (that is among ameneŋame and eŋame) a child always belongs to the rank of its father. According to Kayser the children of " mixed " marriages refer to their parents in order to define their own position. Thus if a temónibe man married an ameneŋame woman, the children are temónibe ex parte patris, and ameneŋame ex parte matris. (P. Kayser, op. ut. p. 328.)

[p.5]

It is true that I was sometimes told that temónibe did have special privileges, as for instance that only they could own frigatebird stands and that only they could impose a taboo upon the coconuts of a district, but closer investigation showed that such things were not regarded as the inalienable rights of a ll who were temónibe : it was either in virtue of his being the senior member of a clan that a true temónibe had special powers, or that, through force of arms and·wealth some temónibe (or some men who through prowess had been accorded temónibe status) had acquired or appropriated to themselves such rights.

[Here ends Wedgwood's comments on kinship and clan]

Tables of Wedgwood's Nauruan Family Trees 1935.

Here follows the family trees collected by Wedgwood during her stay on Nauru in 1935 and are located in Papers of Camilla Wedgwood. Many of these overlap with those taken by Hambruch in 1910.

NOTES:

'Micronesian' in this paper is used to describe the group of languages sharing the same common ancestor language that developed from the earlier ancestor language referred to as 'Proto-Oceanic' – itself a descendent of the original ancestor language referred to as 'Proto-Austronesian'.

The major member languages of the Micronesian group of languages are (alphabetically): Carolinian, Chuukese-Mortlockese, Kiribati, Kosraean, Marshallese, Mwokilese, Nauruan, Pingelapese, Pohnpeian, Puluwatese, Satawalese, Sonsorolese, Ulithian, and Woleaian.

Micronesian, used as a cultural/geographic area, includes (in addition to the above):

(a) the people of Belau, and the Chamorro people of Guam and the Mariana Islands (the languages of these two peoples are more closely related to the languages of the Philippines, and these two peoples appear to have been in-situ far longer than any of the other groups);

(b) the people of Yap (who predated the arrival of the peoples now speaking the Micronesian group of languages, but whose language descended from Proto-Oceanic);

(c) the people of the atolls of Kapingamarangi and Nukuoro, who are members of the Polynesian group of languages (also descended from Proto-Oceanic), who are more recent neighbours.

Notes on Nauru, by Ernest Stephen (circa 1902) in Oceania, Volume VII Number 1 September 1936, pages 34 to 63

"The inhabitants are divided into twelve tribes or aroen: (1) Amed (water snake), (2) Emídemid (grass hopper), (3) Eméa (my eye), (4) Tébai, (5) Eaoáru, (6) Emóngum, (7) Erunibäck, (8) Ano, (9) Emídera, (10) Eruiti (high water line) six members only, (11) Iwui (louse) two members only, (12) Irua (foreigners), made up of all foreign tribes."
